1. It is reported that the Russians have completed the draft of a peace treaty which they will offer to "a united Germany" after the elections scheduled in East Germany for 15 October 1950. The original Russian text of the treaty was delivered on 14 August to Anton Ackermann, the State Secretary for Foreign Affairs. The Soviet commission appointed to draft the treaty consisted of the following persons: Ambassador G.M. Pushkin, S.A. Rolunsky, and (fmu)Saburov, the latter two described as of "SMA Berlin"; the document was also signed by Ivan F. Semichaistnov, representing General Chuikov.
2. The proposed treaty covers 94 points of which the following are the most important:
 - a. The sovereignty of the German Democratic Republic is re-established, and the state of war is ended.
 - b. Following the ratification of the treaty the Soviet Control Commission will cease to exist.
 - c. Soviet forces will be withdrawn from Germany in six to eight months after ratification.
 - d. The Soviet government will be released from any remaining obligations under the Potsdam agreement.
 - e. The German Democratic Republic will fight, side by side with the Soviet Union, for a free and united Germany.
 - f. The Soviet Union recognizes the German Democratic Republic as the only legal government of Germany.
 - g. The Soviet Union will support the admission of the German Democratic Republic into the United Nations Organization.
 - h. In case of any threat to the security of the German Democratic Republic, the Soviet Union and the People's Democracies allied with the Soviet Union will render practical assistance.
